The Galweys of Munster

By SIR HENRY BLACKALL*

GALLWEY OF ENNISKEAN

The earlier ancestry of this branch of the family rests on the authority of two pedigrees in the Office of Arms, Dublin, which were exhibited by Andrew Gallwey of Enniskean in 1779. The circumstances in which they came to be deposited there are as follows. Andrew was a Catholic, and seeing little prospect of advancement at home, he decided to seek his fortune in France, where he settled in the neighbourhood of Nantes. He was a skilled agriculturist and in recognition of improvements effected by him in the landes (unproductive moorland) of Brittany he was granted a tract of such lands by the States of that Province.[330] These he developed to such good purpose that he was later able to purchase the chateau and extensive estate of the Marquis de Turbilly. Having prospered in his adopted country, he decided to apply for Royal Lettres de Relief entitling him to the privileges of the French nobility. With this end in view he submitted a pedigree to Ulster King of Arms for certification in June 1779.[331] In it he traced his descent only as far back as his great-grandfather, James Gallwey, but in the following month he submitted a second pedigree[332] which incorporated the earlier generations of the Lota pedigree registered in 1763 (supra) down to Edward Galwey of Lota (ob. 1670) who was shown therein as father of the aforesaid James. The following conjecture seems to be the most feasible explanation of this sudden volte face. Admission to the nobility in France in the eighteenth century was subject to certain conditions, the qualification generally required, such as that for entrance to the Ecole Militaire, being four generations of ancien noblesse.[333] It well may be therefore that when Andrew Gallwey exhibited his first pedigree for certification he was informed that it would not suffice for admission to the noblesse de lettres. This placed him on the horns of a dilemma, for he had either to forego his cherished ambition or produce a longer lineage. Now it appears from his first pedigree that his family claimed descent from the senior line of the Galweys, though he obviously did not know where they branched off. It is evident also that he had access to the Lota pedigree of 1763. It is suggested then that in order to get over his predicament he indulged in some guesswork, and produced a pedigree tailored to fit the case.

If such were his object it had the desired result, for on 16 July 1779 Ulster certified that ' Andrew Gallwey of Nantz . . . . is lawfully descended in a direct line from Richard De Burgh who died in the year 1387 as appears in this genealogy ',[334] and on 13 March 1787 the French king granted Lettres de Relief to ' notre bien aimé André Gallwey né a Enniskean au comté de Cork ' reciting his descent from ' Richard de Bourke ' and setting out ' in extenso ' the subsequent generations of the Lota pedigree down to Edward of Lota and his two wives, ' de l' un de ces deux mariages est né Jacques Gallwey ' (Andrew's forebear). The pedgree as set out in that instrument was followed in Saint Allais' Nobilaire Universel de France,[335] and has since then been accepted without question. As I have already expressed my views on the Galwey claim to a De Burgh ancestry (to which, with due respect to those eminent authorities, I still adhere) I shall confine myself to dealing briefly with the question whether James Gallwey the elder was a son of Edward Galwey of Lota.

As to this, no mention is made in any Lota pedigree of Edward having a son named James by either of his wives, while Andrew's second pedigree (which was brought forth after a suspiciously brief gestation) does not specify of which marriage James was the offspring. The evidence in support of his parentage is therefore very slender, so let us apply a chronological test.

It is stated in Andrew's first pedigree that his grandfather, James the younger, was expelled from Cork in 1656 ' with his wife Mary O'Mullane and a number of his children ', so he could not have been born later than 1630. But if Andrew's second pedigree is accepted this James was a nephew of John Galwey M.P., who was born c. 1650 : in other words he was born 20 years before his father's elder brother ; so on chronological grounds alone Andrew's claim to descend from Edward of Lota cannot stand.

This does not however necessarily involve rejection of the family tradition of a common ancestor with the Galweys of Lota, and it is suggested that James the elder might be identified with James Gallwey fz Patrick, ' a Mayor's son ', who was admitted to the freedom of Cork 24 Sept. 1617.[336] This would make him a son of Patrick Gallwey, Mayor of Cork 1582. But as James's parentage cannot be conclusively proved it will be safer to start the Enniskean pedigree with himself viz,

James Gallwey of Cork, who m. Mary Gould[337] (she m. 2ndly Edmond Gould of [334] This certificate is endorsed on the back of the chart pedigree. It purports to be given by Wm. Hawkins (Ulster, 1765-87) but does not bear his signature. The names ' Buckingham ' and ' Thos. Waite ' are at the bottom in the same handwriting as the certificate. It is endorsed ' 1779, 14 Aug. Delivered 15 descents '. The 2nd Earl of Buckinghamshire was Lord-Lieutenant 1776-80.

[335] Published 1817. The Marquis de Goulaine possesses a similar pedigree certified by St. Allais as having been compiled from original sources and historical documents presented to him. M de Goulaine, who kindly supplied me with a copy of this certificate, believes it to have been prepared for his ancestress, Henriette, Marquise de Goulains (neé Gallwey) in 1837. [337] Ald. Henry Gould, Fun. Entry, 12 Nov. 1635 (G.O. MS 69, p. 189) mentions his dau. Ellen m. John Gallwey of Cork, his dau. Ellis m. Stephen, son of Thomas Coppinger, chief of his name, and a dau. Mary unm. As Andrew's first pedigree states that Mary Gould's sister m. Coppinger of Ballyvolane, Col. H.D. Gallwey suggests that James m. Mary after the death of Ald. Henry, or alternatively that Andrew was mistaken about the names of his gr.gr. parents, who might be identified with John Gallwey and Ellen Gould in the F.E.

Cork) by whom he had issue, with several daughters (one of whom m. MacFineen 'Dhuv' O' Sullivan),[338] a son,

James Gallwey of Cork and later of Enniskean, Co. Cork. He was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, and might be identified with ' James Galweyn ', who according to an informer (Edward Trenwith of Bantry) procured commissions from James II for the raising of armed men ' who did great injury to Protestants '.[339] He is stated to have forfeited his lands in the barony of Carbery (' James Gallway, Corke, gent ' was outlawed for high treason committed in parts beyond the seas)[340] and to have accompanied the fallen monarch to France. But after a few years he returned to Ireland, and died at Enniskean. He m. Mary, dau. of James O'Mullane of Moragh, Co. Cork,[341] by whom he had issue :—

1. James (Rev), b. 1655, ' a priest in France '. He is probably identical with Fr. James Gallwey who entered the Jesuit Order 1678 and became a missionary in the West Indies 1699. He d. 1732.[342]
2. Michael, who, having been outlawed for treason in Ireland, became ' a merchant of considerable repute in Rochell '. On 4 April 1691 we read of a sale ' by Michael Gallwey, merchant, present at La Rochelle, in the name of his father, James Galwey, merchant, of Cork, of the ship ' Le Saint Bonaventure ' of Cork, 90 tons, being in the roads of La Rochelle, for 5000 livres'. He is said to have ended his days in a religious house.
3. Patrick, who joined the Duke of Ormonde's projected expedition for an invasion of England in 1719, in which he is said to have been given command of a Spanish warship.[343] He m. — dau. of N. Creagh of Limerick and had issue two sons, who settled in Spain, and a daughter who m. Capt. Cooke, Spanish service, brother of Thomas Cooke of Painstown, Co. Carlow,[344]

GALLWEY OF ENNISKEAN—FRENCH BRANCH

Andrew Gallwey (fifth son of Henry Gallwey of Bantry and Mary Mellifont (supra)), seigneur de Turbilly, was b. 1717 at Enniskean. He settled in France post. 1741, and had a grant of lands from the States of Brittany. In Sept. 1781 he purchased for 15,000 louis d'ors the chateau and estate of Turbilly, comprising 3000 arpents,[373] together with the seigneury of two parishes.[374] He was naturalised March 1772,[375] and granted Lettres de Relief by Louis XVI on 7 Sept. 1785.[376] He m. 1747 Helen Kavanagh, and d. 7 Sept. 1785 (bur. at Volandry),[377] having had issue:

1. Henri Jacques, of whom presently.
2. Patrice, b. c.1765 educ. St. Omer.

The elder son,

Henri Jacques, seigneur de Turbilly, b. 1 June 1752. Cadet, Walsh's Regt. (Irish Brigade) 13 July 1771, Capt. 1778; fought in the American War of Independence.[378] He entertained Arthur Young at Turbilly in 1788.[379] He voted for the States-General [373] Arpent, an obsolete French measure of land, varied from 5/6 to 1¼ acres.

[374] The estate carried with it the feudal title of seigneur, i.e. lord of the manor, and both Andrew and his son Henri were styled 'seigneur'. The latter's heir (described in de Morenas, op.cit., as 'dit le Comte de Gallway') was the first to be so styled. When Young was asking the way to the chateau of the Marquis de Turbilly his informant erroneously described the present owner as Marquis de Galwey, while in Hayes, Biogr.Dict.Irish in France, p. 100, Henri is described as Marquis de Turbilly. But the Marquis de Goulaine tells me that none of the Gallweys was a marquis, nor are they so styled in any genealogical work of reference.

[375] The naturalization papers were registered in the Parliament of Rennes, whose Record Office was at Nantes.

[376] The original Lettres de Relief are preserved in the Chambre des Comptes, Paris, Reg. P. 2601 ann. 1780 f. 7.

[377] The burial register describes him as 'Messire Andre Gallwey de Dundagan, Seigneur de Turbilly'. Although Dundanion was owned by the Galweys of Lota in the 16th century they never styled themselves as 'of Dundanion' in the 18th century.

[378] Particulars of his military service (from Archives Nat. 03-2641—etc) were kindly supplied by Vicomte Grouvel, author of Les Corps de troupes de l'emigration francaise (1789-1815).

[379] Young, Travels op. cit. He told Young that his gr.gr. father came to Brittany with James, II and that 'some of the same family are still in Co. Cork, particularly at Lotta'. But he made no mention of his relatives at Enniskean, and Young noticed that he spoke good English, which would be surprising if he was the fourth generation settled in France, but not if his father hailed from Cork.

at Angers 1789, but joined the emigrés in 1791, and served as Lt-Col. Berwick's Regt. under the Prince de Condé. (Croix de St. Louis 13 Nov. 1799). He m. 1778 Marie Madeleine Jeanne Fortier de Chevigné of St. Malo, and d. 25 June 1816 at Turbilly (bur. Volandry), having had issue :

1. Andre Patrice Edouard Marie.
1. A dau., bapt. 2 Feb. 1786 at St. Nicholas, Nantes.
2. Henriette Emilie Pauline (1798-1863), m. 1819 Alphonse, Marquis de Goulaine (1789-1845), from whom descends in the fourth generation,
   Mathieu, Marquis de Goulaine (Chateau de la Grange, St. Etienne de Corcouè, Loire) b. 1901,[380] m. Charlotte d'Argenson, dau. of the Marquis d'Argenson, and has issue. He represents the Counts de Gallwey in the female line.

The elder son,

André Patrice Edouard Marie Count de Gallwey, Chevalier Legion of Honour, b. 1790 Capt. 18th Chasseurs. Served in the Napoleonic armies 1808-1814 but when Napoleon landed in France in 1815 he disregarded an order recalling him to the colours, and joined the Royalist army of the Count d'Ambrugeac.[381] He was Mayor of Volandry 1818-26. He m. 5 Feb. 1817 Francoise Marie Virginie de Luce and d. at Turbilly 29 Aug. 1826 having had issue :

1. Henri Edouard Gabriel, b. 1819 Count de Gallwey, m. 1838 Marie de Beaucourt (who m. 2ndly, Marquis de Broc). He left Turbilly to his widow and d.s.p. 28 July 1846 at La Fleche (bur. Volandry).
2. Edouard Alphonse, of whom we treat.

The second son,

Edouard Alphonse, Count de Gallwey, b. 1820 m. 1st, Julia Georgina MacCann, by whom he had a son Henri who d.s.p. He m. 2ndly, Marie Pineau de Villenay (b. 1826, d. 1884) and lived on her estate near Paris. He d. 1889 having had issue :

1. Henri, of whom presently.
1. Pauline, b. 1851, m. 1871 Arthur, Count Claret de Fleurieu (b. 1831, d. 1898) and d. 1888.

The only son,

Henri, Count de Gallwey, b. 1845, m. 1873 Madeleine de Belabré, (d. 1937)[382] and d. 1902 leaving issue :

Patrice, Count de Gallwey, who was killed in a motor accident 6 Sept. 1909. He d. unm., the last of his line.

[380] The Marquis de Goulaine descends from Jean, seigneur de Goulaine, who gave his son Mathieu as a hostage to Henry II, between whose son, Geoffrey Plantagenet, and Mathieu a great friendship was born, and in 1185 Richard Coeur de Lion and Philip of France granted Mathieu and his descendants the right to quarter the leopards of England and fleur-de-lis in recognition of his success in bringing them together. I am indebted to M. de Goulaine for this interesting piece of family history.

[381] Saint Allais op. cit.

[382] She was aunt of the marquise de Goulaine (neé d'Argenson).
