enough. St. Ruth does not seem to have taken much pains to strengthen his position. He lost the battle of Aughrim by the same failing which had before lost him Athlone—a pertinacious confidence in his own opinion, and contempt for the judgment of others.(5)

(5) Some generals seem to think the only consequence to be drawn from a victory is to sing a Te Deum. The late Marshal Dann was remarkable for his fondness for this church music; sooner than omit it, he suffered the whole Prussian army to escape after their defeat at Kolein. Laudohn, then a lieut-colonel of Croats, being youngest in the council of war, gave his opinion for immediately pushing on a corps to seize a pass, which, if preoccupied, no Prussian could ever have reached his own country; had the advice of a Croat been followed on that day, his present Majesty of Prussia would not probably have been enabled to play so important a part on the political theatre of Europe as has lately fallen to him; his glorious predecessor's course was near terminated. The Austrians of that time used to affect to call him, facetiously, Le Petit Marquis de Brandenburgh.

No greater boon could have been bestowed on collectors of Irish silver plate than that which Mr. Berry has conferred upon them in the list of the Masters and Wardens of the ancient Guild of Dublin Goldsmiths, which now appears for the first time in print. It supplies a want long felt by both silversmiths and collectors, for it often happens that the date letters on pieces of plate are so rubbed down that they are undistinguishable, while the stamps with the makers' initials are preserved. Up to the present, there has been no means of identifying these marks on Irish plate, which has deprived it of much of its interest and value ; while, on the contrary, Chaffers, in his "Gilda Aurifabrarum," has enabled the collector or owner of English family plate to at once identify the makers' marks, with their names and localities.

It sometimes occurs that on eighteenth century Irish plate when using the stamps at the Assay Office, through carelessness or design, the date letter was omitted, and there remained only the form, decoration, and workmanship of the piece of silver, and the size of the crowned harp stamp as a guide to determine the age ; but now the key to the makers' marks will solve the difficulty, and if the exact year cannot be fixed, we can tell the period in which the maker wrought, and will be able to clearly approximate the date of his work. It will also enable us to compare one maker with another, and give the praise to those who evinced the greatest ability as art workers and designers. This has long since been done for the members of the Goldsmiths' Guild in London, and the fact of the maker's mark having been identified with the maker, has brought Paul Lamerie and others into the first rank of London's eighteenth century silversmiths.

Quarterly Notes.

History of the Town and County of Wexford—Dunbrody Abbey, The Great Island, Ballyhack, etc. Edited by Philip Edward Hore. (London: Elliot Stock, 1901). This forms the third volume of Mr. Hore's monumental History of Wexford, but it is otherwise a separate and complete work in itself. It affords an ample and very interesting account of one of the richest and most important of the Norman ecclesiastical houses in Ireland from its foundation to its fall—and after. Mr. Hore writes more after the manner of a chronicler than of a historian; and this course, in a subject like the present, is not without its advantages. He resorts to the fountain head, as far as possible, for the materials of his book, and allows the reader to form his own impressions as he pleases without thrusting religious considerations of any sort upon his notice. In 1175 Hervey de Montmorency, one of the most cruel and rapacious of the Norman
